

From Research to Engagement

Social Sciences and Infectious Disease

Oxford – May 9th 2022
09:15 – 12:30 BST

Click here to attend via virtual livestream

1946 DDT Fly Spraying at garbage dump,
CDC

IRC-AHRC Digital Humanities Initiative

Program

Panel One 9:35-10:20 – Knowing Disease (Moderator: Samantha Vanderslott)

Margaret Pelling (University of Oxford) – William Budd and the value of small places

Roderick Bailey (University of Oxford) – Pathogens and prejudice: How a typhoid outbreak in Palestine in 1948 became a story about Jews poisoning Arabs

Claas Kirchhelle (University College Dublin) – Northern Normal: How international surveillance networks turned typhoid into a Southern disease.

Panel Two 10:30-11:35 – Ecologies of Disease (Moderator: Claas Kirchhelle)

Emily Webster (University College Dublin) – Cockles and Mussels, Alive Alive Ho!: Estuarial Ecologies and the Epidemiology of Typhoid in Dublin, Ireland, 1880-1920

Atsuko Naono (University of Oxford) – Malaria control and the political crisis in Myanmar

Javier Lezaun (University of Oxford) – TBC

Jeong-Ran Kim (University of Oxford) – The US military's disease control in South Korea, 1945-46: malaria and typhus

Panel Three 11:45-12:30 – Engaging Disease (Moderator: Emily Webster)

Ethan Friederich (University of Oxford) – A historical view of vaccine hesitancy among healthcare workers

Sam Martin (University of Oxford) – Social Media discussions of vaccination

Samantha Vanderslott (University of Oxford) – Typhoidland and public engagement